The need for a book to help parents and caregivers whose children have seen violence has never been more apparent than in the days following the September 11 terrorist attacks on the U.S.

“Children Who See Too Much will fill the need for a road map felt by parents overwhelmed by all the awfulness around them.” -Judith Warner, The Washington Post “The subject makes Children Who See Too Much an easy choice for social workers and pediatric counselors.

Boston Medical Center's 10-year-old Child Witness to Violence Project is designed to help parents and caregivers whose children have seen violence.

In Children Who See Too Much, Betsy Groves debunks the myth that young age is a protector against the lasting effects of witnessing violence in the home. She makes the powerful case that traumatic events carried out by family members carry the most severe psychological risks for very young children and uses the newest cognitive research to explore how very young children process violence.

After the brutal assault on Abigail Witchalls and her two-year-old son Joseph last week, Emily Wilson asks how children can ever cope with such a traumatic experience.
