This book is a better biography of Craft the restaurant than it is a cookbook. Although I wouldn't like to be as limited in my repertoire as Colicchio is in this restaurant, I do agree with his food philosophy in general - seasonality, simplicity, etc. I don't think I'll be attempting any of the recipes in the meat and fish sections.

Tom Colicchio's New York restaurant Craft is all about the food. Not food as a medium for feats of culinary sleight of hand, but foods that taste unmistakably like themselves-- only more so.

Introduces a selection of 125 recipes that emphasize fresh, seasonal, and local ingredients, explaining how to maximize flavor and texture cooking.
