Readers learn the basics of caring for common household pets, from physical features, to behavior, to diet. Also explored is how the animal's natural habitat differs from the habitat provided in the home. Jennifer Blizin Gillis is the author of 'Goldfish (Pets at My House)', published 2004 under ISBN 9781403460219 and ISBN 1403460213.

My grandparents had a goldfish that lived in an old shallow sink in the greenhouse, they thought it was roughly 40 yrs old when it died. It had been fished out a canal when my uncle was a child, lived happily in the sink occasionally being frozen inside a block of ice. I was considering getting another goldfish for the shallow sink, perhaps I shouldn't go to pets at home.....

Unlike dogs, cats and other common pets, goldfish grow until they die. They do not grow at a steady, predictable rate; instead, goldfish grow in bursts. Typically, an outdoor goldfish grows more when the weather is warm and less in winter.

Goldfish owners can supplement their pets' diets by occasionally offering mosquito larva, blood-worms, daphnia, Brine or Mysis shrimp. Some keepers like to feed their goldfish chopped squid, mussel, and marine white fish -- special treats, as any marine pathogens in these particular animals rarely transfer to freshwater environments.
