Kate Harris' debut work, Lands of Lost Borders, opens with a Virginia Woolf epigraph declaring, "We are forever mixing ourselves with unknown quantities," which is the essential mission behind Harris' plan to bicycle across Asia, tracing the ancient Silk Road. Her retelling of the trip makes for a travelogue infused with science, history, and literature stretching from sea level to the roof of the world.

Lands of Lost Borders, winner of the 2018 Banff Adventure Travel Award and a 2018 Nautilus Award, is the chronicle of Harris's odyssey and an exploration of the importance of breaking the boundaries we set ourselves; an examination of the stories borders tell, and the restrictions they place on nature and humanity; and a meditation on the existential need to explore—the essential longing to discover what in the universe we are doing here.

Thank you to Kate Harris and the publisher for sending me a copy of Lands of Lost Borders: Out of Bounds on the Silk Road. I haven't finish it, but she is such a good writer I had to leave a preemptive 5 star review.

We are lucky. We know it. All day, every day, we work with people on bikes they will do amazing things with, and sometimes, as we found out recently, they'll even write books about those things.

So you're planning a trip on the Silk Road. You're looking for tips on what to take, routes, currencies, visas. Well, if you are, this is not the book for you.
