In Life Breaks In: A Mood Almanack, Cappello informs us “Kenneth Goldsmith calls Facebook status lines ‘mood blasts.’” Every paragraph of Life Breaks In is a Think Blast, and great pleasure to follow into its marvels.”

By Mary Cappello University of Chicago Press October 2016, 408 pages. A review by David Lazar “I’m in the Mood for Love” is a song with lyrics by one of my favorite lyricists, Dorothy Fields, a writer who would fit well in the gallery of mood-inducers Mary Cappello explores in Life Breaks In, her fifth book, just published by the ...

Mary Cappello evokes thousands of moods in the course of 300 pages as she takes the reader on a journey of memory, sensation, emotions and feelings.

“Atmospheric changes” that “awaken forgotten selves” is how Proust neatly explains mood in In Search of Lost Time, cited by Mary Cappello in her own curiously described “mood almanack”.

All my life I have been a browser of dictionaries, a Sunday-afternoon flipper of phone books, a belly-on-the-carpet peruser of atlases and anthologies.

"Cappello . . . has made a habit of calling our attention to states of being that are too often unremarked. . . . Formally, Life Breaks In is full of play; it is, as the subtitle suggests, an almanac of erudite and autobiographically playful dances around the possibility of what mood might be. . . .
